

The Song of Autumn.

I have painted the woods, I have kindled the fire,
I have brightened the hills with a glance of mine eye;
I have scattered the fruits, I have gathered the corn,
And now from the earth must her verdure be torn.
Ye lingering flowers, ye leaves of the spray,
I summon ye all—away! away!

No more from the depth of the grove may be heard
The joy-burdened song of its fluttering bird;
I have passed over the branches that shelter him there
And their quivering drapery is shaken to air.
Ye lingering flowers, ye leaves of the spray,
I summon ye all—away! away!

Plead not the days are yet sunny and long,
That your hues are still bright'ning, your fibres still
To vigor and beauty, relentless am I—
There is nothing too young or too lovely to die.
Ye lingering flowers, ye leaves of the spray,
I summon ye all—away! away!

And I call on the winds that repose in the north,
To send their wild voices in unison forth:
Let the harp of the tempest be dolefully strung—
There's a wail to be made, there's a dirge to be sung;
For the lingering flowers the leaves of the spray,
They are doomed—they are dying away! away!

"The Pivot of the National Future."

Wendell Phillips made a speech at Farmington, Mass., on the 4th of July, from which we extract the following views, upon the political future, and the position of the Administration:

Mr. Sumner, Mr. Wilson, Mr. Kelley, they say to him: "Sir, the white race has three elements; make the fourth impartial." The President says: "I hesitate, I do not see my way clear." What do these gentlemen say? "If you don't see your way clear, stop; if the way don't open before you, stand still until it does. If you don't see your way clear to re-organize those states, keep them where they are." That is the advice Mr. Sumner gave him; that is the advice Judge Kelly gave him. I have no disposition to bear hard upon the President. The solution of the question depends upon his being on our side. I am standing here to-day to take counsel with you to find out—what? Two things: What are the indications in our possession to-day of where the President means to stand? That is the first question. The second is, if he is not right to-day, how can he be made to?

Let me show you the importance of this question: "Where will President Johnson stand on the 4th day of December next?" The press and public speakers recently undertook to discuss how we could keep the rebel States out of Congress. Men say: "The next Congress may be relied upon; they cannot get a majority to vote them in. No matter where President Johnson stands; there is the bulwark of Congress; they never will recognize these States." Is not that the comfort which every politician gives you? There would be some hope if the members of Congress would have an opportunity—with the delegates of the rebel States outside of the doors of Congress—to vote whether they should sit there. But in my opinion President Johnson's theory is, that the States have never been out of the Union. Their relations have only been suspended, not destroyed. They are going to have members of Congress chosen this summer. During the next five months they will be elected. On the 4th day of December eighty-four Southern Representatives, from North Carolina, South Carolina, Georgia, Alabama, Mississippi, Louisiana, Arkansas, Florida and Texas, will march into Washington. Will they stay at the outside of the doors of Congress? No! they will walk into Congress and sit down in their old seats. They will say, "Gentlemen, President Johnson says the States have never been out of the Union." How can you check them? What is the next step. Mr. McPherson, Clerk of the House, is the only officer. The way you organize Congress is this: He rises and says, "We are," cry out the crowd. He then proceeds to call State after State—Massachusetts, Maine, New Hampshire, New York, Connecticut, Rhode Island. Suppose he goes on, and calls North Carolina, Alabama, Mississippi. They respond. It remains with him, and with him only, whether we shall call these eighty-four men inside. When he has done it they vote for Speaker. But you may say "Mr. Boutwell won't let them." Gentlemen, it is not in order to object. If McPherson admits them you cannot object to the Speaker chosen. Well, the Speaker is chosen. Mr. Boutwell rises and says, "I move that Louisiana has no right to sit on this floor." The subject is referred to a committee. Suppose the committee report that she is not, or that she is, no matter which. The six gentlemen walk out-side the bar. Of the eighty-four Southern seventy-eight remain, and they vote on the question. Seventy-eight rebel Representatives are to join in the decision. But you say, "Mr. McPherson won't do it." Why, there is not one politician in a thousand could resist it. If President Johnson says it is to be done, it will be done. If not, it will not be done. That is the importance of knowing where the President means to stand on the 4th day of December. If he lets the colored race know that he thinks those States have not dissolved their relations with the Government, and have a right to resume them, then eighty-four votes will walk inside of that Congress, and the question will be, not shall we admit them, but shall we put them out? On that question of putting them out, seventy-eight of them will vote. The Democratic party will join with them, if the President wishes them. A large share of the Republican party will join with them if the President wishes it. So you see, colored race, and the disposition of Andy Johnson on the 4th day of December next. He, to-day, stands urging these States to choose their men to Congress. Now, the question is, "Can we exert any such power on him as that when he has got them chosen, he shall allow them to stand outside of Congress, and abide the judgment of the loyal members of that body?" We are hoping that those States will stand outside of Congress, and our Republican party shall say, "You cannot come in until you send us a ratification of the Constitutional Amendment." But suppose when they stand there the Clerk of the house drags them in without giving us time to propose that condition? Why, then they will say, "Gentlemen, here we are. If you want that amendment ratified, we will treat them out—this is the bill of our politics, that is the pivot of the national future. In order to prevent him, you have got to keep Andy Johnson within the right and sound of Charles Sumner's and Judge Kelly's voice and advice. To-day he's not there."
